with some good reason,}

\tnote{My wife, who is a social scientist, says one should never use the word "neoliberalism," even to an audience of academics: it is too often misinterpreted. A reasonably evocative alternative would be "free-market fundamentalism,"}

\tnote{And after the neoliberal revolution came the Second Gilded Age of astonishing inequality!}

Various thinkers have suggested ways of getting this mess under control:
\begin{itemize}
\item[{\bullet}] Elizabeth Warren suggests we break up and/or regulate tech giants.\footnote{\tiny Sasha Baron Cohen agreed in a magnificent prize-acceptance speech to the Anti-Defamation League.\textbf{\link{}} \item[{\bullet}] Cory Doctorow suggests we try \textit{"adversarial inter-operability"} -- open standards enforced by governments -- and see if the open community can provide better tools and platforms.\textbf{\link{}} \end{itemize}

\tnote{Notice in any case that the problems seem to stem from market-based solutions run amok, or at least greed-based systems, even if the markets are rather controlled. Remember this when we make the analogy with Open Ed!}
